Beetlestone Award Application Process

There is no proforma for this application, but you are requested to use the headings below in the order shown, and to set out your application clearly and concisely in response to the questions asked. Please refer to the Notes of Guidance as you do so.

Personal details

(a) Full name, professional and residential addresses (b) Your preferred telephone number and email address for communication regarding this Award.

Role and responsibilities

Describe your current role and responsibilities, and state the length of time you have held this position.

Progression

Outline your major achievements and contributions to date to the field of 'informal science learning'. What have been the defining moments in your career so far, and what are you most proud of? If you have something to add about your response to the impact of Covid-19 on the sector, this is the place to include it.

Vision

What is your vision (a) for your personal contribution to the field in your remaining years of work, and (b) for the development of the field in general?

Legacy

What can you now identify as the probable legacy of your personal contributions to the field of 'informal science learning'?

Awardee responsibility

Within twelve months of receiving this Award, the recipient will be required to share their anticipated legacy with the field. Explain how you would do this, by means of a creative contribution to a conference, workshop or online resource - describing the work upon which your application for the Award is based, and explaining its relevance and application to the wider field of ISL.

References

References are not required, but if you would like the support of third-party referees, please supply the names and contact details of no more than two individuals that the panel may choose to approach.

Your application should be sent by email to johnsonc30@cardiff.ac.uk, to arrive no later than Saturday 1 May 2021
